

Imagine a world without sharks

Shark populations have been decimated over the past thirty years, some by as much as 90%.

Sharks face a unique threat.

They are hunted mercilessly, and few people view sharks as creatures that need saving.

The demand for shark has risen dramatically to feed increasing consumption of shark fin soup. This has led to the annual death of as many as 73 million sharks worldwide.

Find out how you can save sharks by visiting www.sharksavers.org

The thing we should fear the most about sharks is their looming extinction.

